I had a few monitors in my lifetime and I have to say this one is probably one of the Best ones yet. Its well worth the money and the HDMI is off the hook. Two thumbs up for me

I've had mine for about a month and i'm still getting used to the size of it. It literally feels like a mini TV. The quality is top notch. the coloring is perfect, imo. The only thing that would make this better is if it was 120hz so I wouldn't have to use vertical sync when playing high-end games that output 120 fps!

The 1st day, got it, set it up. Great. The 2nd day, thousands of dead pixels dotted the screen. Onboard controls almost impossible to use. Sent it back. Very disappointed.

I use this monitor for gaming and it is hands down the best monitor i have ever used for gaming. The 1ms response time is killer and it looks stunning playing battlefield bad company 2 through the HDMI at 1900x1080. if your a gamer get it! you won't regret it. If your not a gamer get it anyways because it's awesome even for reading emails!

What You Should Know

Dual Monitor Technology

Few PC users have ever experienced the huge productivity boost that comes from using multiple monitors on the same PC. Ironically, many of today's PC have the capability already installed, and Windows (since 2000) natively supports dual monitors. Configuring dual monitors is so easy: just use the second video port (if there are two separate ports installed), or add a second video card or better yet, a video card that has dual DVI ports. Then plug in your second monitor, change a couple of simple Windows settings, and you have double the Windows Desktop. This lets you have your spreadsheet and email visible at the same time, or PowerPoint and Photoshop. The combinations are endless. And since most of the overhead is handled by the video card, there is little significant impact (if any) on system performance. Dual Monitors is one of the simplest, yet most amazing productivity boosters you can add to your PC! Optionally, you can use a dual monitor stand and recover your workspace in the process!
